VISION

Friends or Foes?

In business there is always competitive jobs whether it is just hardworking for the job you want to be promoted to which happens in usually every job. Competition and cooperation are good as they give you a challenge in the workplace.

In both these topics there is often tension which can lead to conflict between workers in the workplace. You need a bit of tension but not too much you want to be telling yourself to be better than the other guy in the job so you can gain the promotion you wanted. Competition can often end up turning one guy being cocky and thinking they are above everyone else so that makes other workers upset and that leads to less work being done in the job.

With Cooperation if you need an extra hand with something you will get it and it is good as you can motivate each other which will help them to get more done in the business and the more done in the job the more likely you are to get promoted to the actual role in the job you wanted.

These roles are good as they make a worker work to the best of their ability if done correctly they can help the employees make the job fun and also by doing good work at the same time.

Get yourself a right team!

If you are searching for an employee for your business take a look at this article. We have prepared a special article for you. The letters CV stand for curriculum vitae which is Latin for “course of life”. It is a detailed summary of not only a person’s past history of education, experience and qualifications but also related accomplishments and is generally used when an individual is looking for a job. Ideally a good solid resume is about one page in length and can be submitted for almost any type of job on the market.

Unfortunately, there isn’t one specific format for a CV and you will have to determine exactly what CV is right for the position you are applying to. A CV should always include your basic information starting with your name, address, telephone number and email. For United States and Canadian job seekers, that’s generally all you need to include. If you search for example CVs online, you are likely to come across ones that include a small passport-sized photo of the applicant in the upper right-hand corner.

While this practice is standard in France, Belgium and Germany, it is NOT considered appropriate for CVs in the United States and Canada. Just a heads up. As a CV is a thorough detailing of your history, that includes your educational past as well as your work experience and any training you might have received. When detailing your education, you want to do it in reverse chronological order. Be sure to include the full list of your degrees, including those you’ve already earned and any you might be currently pursuing as well as where you received your education. Be sure to list the years of your graduation. If you are the author of a dissertation or thesis, you would include that information here as well as the name of your advisor. For your work history, you want to include not only where you’ve worked, but also any applicable experiences related to that work.

How many languages do you speak? Are you fluent in multiple tongues? What about computer programs? Are you an accomplished graphic designer who has an extensive knowledge of specific software? List that too! Are you an author of any papers, articles or books? Are you an expert in your field and thus find yourself speaking at conferences, panels or symposiums? Make sure you list those and give a brief description of each so your reader knows what you've done and where. Other sections you might include in your CV (depending entirely on the job you're applying for) include (Study Abroad, Exhibitions, Professional Licenses and/or memberships, Consulting Work, Professional Development, Research Experience, Teaching Experience etc).

What is waiting for you when you start?

Humanity has always been influenced by trends, and a pretty big trend today is starting your own business. You may start a photo studio, you may open a local bakery, or you may just go for something simple and start selling silicon cellphone cases from China. The number of ideas is incredibly large. However, mostly the businesses that make difference and create additional value for the customer, get noticed and win the market share.

First thing you want to do after having the idea in your head and before starting your business is to plan your steps. Firstly, you want to identify on paper who you are, what problem you are trying to solve and what solution you are offering to your potential customers. The next step you need to perform is to analyze the market. This includes a bunch of factors like figuring out who will be buying from you, how many buyers are out there and how many of them you can actually get to buy from you. You also want to know how big this market is and who is offering a similar product or service. In this way you will get the idea of what is waiting for you once you actually walk in this door. Be critical, look for improvements, plan your steps. Always go an extra mile in anything you do and find yourself a team that is willing to do the same. However, do not overthink your steps. Just get out there and try to make a difference.

We will go more into detail of the company and market analysis in our next release.

Unique/innovative business ideas of your countries that you consider successful

It is difficult to define what business innovation is with one single definition. Basically, it represents anything new or different that changes the business model of a company and is of a great value to its customers. All successful companies start with good business idea. It is not only important in the initial stage of a company. The key is to figure out a winning concept that will be offered to its customers.

After a long time of investigation and research, we have managed to put six countries in one article. In the following paragraph you will discover unique and/or innovative business ideas that originate and are developed in: Ukraine, Estonia, Romania, Ireland, Czech Republic and Croatia.

We will start with a great idea which originates from Ukraine and Estonia. It is said for hoverbike that is like something out of Star Wars. It is a rectangular prop-powered flying device. It is successfully tested and is planned to be used for supply and delivery in the transportation industry. On fully charged battery it can run 28 minutes, extending the battery life to 2 hours if working on hybrid battery. In the future it is said it will be used as a cargo or taxi drone.

In Romania anti-virus software Bitdefence has unsettled the CIA. Bitdefender causes many problems to CIA hackers. It resists to all CIA attempts as it is detecting CIA methods. Bitdefender is a antivirus software for both business and professional use. That means you can have the best antivirus too!

The most valuable Ireland's company that everyone has heard about is Ryanair. It is the most successful low-cost airline in the world in terms of equity value creation. The main key driver of its success lies in the fact that it brought great cost-cutting proposals to the industry. They are offering the best deals to the passenger to get from one point to another. All other services (including the luggage) are not included in the price and some of them overpriced.

Czech Republic is the original home of Avast. Headquartered in Prague, Avast security software is protecting more than 200 million PCs, Androids and Macs against virus attacks and cyber threats.

Founded in Sveta Nedjelja in Croatia, Rimac cars is the only Croatian company producing cars. Firstly started in the garage and today employing 150 people. Cars are powered only by batteries and can drive up to 510km after 30 minutes
